Before the California Gold Rush
there was the California Mule Rush.
And the Old Spanish Trail played a pivotal role.

From 1830 to 1850, California was plagued by the "Chaguanosos." They were after mules and California had plenty of them. This motley band of thieves were unemployed trappers, Ute Indians and New Mexico traders. They plundered ranchos and missions from Monterey to San Diego and drove thousands of stolen mules and horses up the Old Spanish Trail. These mules were headed for Independence, Missouri where they were sold for a fortune. In MULA, you'll witness the whole story, told by packers, breeders, traders, and mule drivers and riders from California to Santa Fe to Missouri and Tennessee. Featured in the film is the aparejo which was the Spanish system for packing mules. Enjoy 95 minutes of in-depth information presented in a lively, entertaining format highlighted with great music. Filmmakers Susan Jensen and Paul Singer will be present to answer questions.

"The story is told in a genius way, It's the best film on mules and their history I've ever seen."
